Методичні вказівки для виконання контрольних робіт

Матеріал збірника організований за семестрами. Студент повинен письмово виконати усі завдання. Кожна контрольна робота пропонується у п’яти варіантах відповідно до останніх цифр шифру залікової книжки. Якщо шифр залікової книжки закінчується на 1 або 6 – студент виконує варіант № 1; 2 або 7 – варіант № 2; 3 або 8 – варіант № 3; 4 або 9 – варіант № 4; 5 або 0 – варіант № 5.

Робота повинна бути виконана в окремому зошиті. На обкладинці потрібно зазначити прізвище та ініціали, номер контрольної роботи, спеціальність та номер академічної групи, домашню адресу, дату відправлення роботи в університет.

Матеріал контрольної роботи потрібно розташовувати у зошиті таким чином:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ліва сторінка</th>
<th>права сторінка</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>поле завдання</td>
<td>виконане завдання</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Виконані контрольні роботи надсилайте для перевірки та рецензування в університет заздалегідь. Виконуючи завдання, студент повинен дотримуватись наступних правил:

1) писати охайно, чітким почерком;
2) для зауважень залишити поля;
3) переписувати в зошиті умови завдань;
4) перекладаючи з англійської мови на українську, писати англійські речення зліва, переклад – справа.

Якщо контрольна робота виконана без додержання вимог або не повністю, вона повертається для повторного виконання. На одному з практичних занять під час заліково-екзаменатійної сесії студент повинен захистити контрольну роботу.

Through the ages, sport has served a socially useful function in shaping, testing, and celebrating human transformations necessary for cultural continuity. Little wonder political leaders retain considerable interest in sport as a tool of enculturation. With regard to any one society, one may expect to find content and circumstances of physical education vary according to whether a society is trying to replace, repair, maintain, or stabilize its social structure. In this context, sport is often used to create common myths for people of newly built or transforming nations, to arouse feelings of attachment to a glorious, vigorous, healthy, and great society envisioned by the nation-builders.

Carried to extremes, this mythical role of sport in national identity building can degenerate into racism with much emphasis on ethnic differences in intelligence, health, and athletic abilities, as borne out in Nazi Germany and Apartheid South Africa. Nevertheless, sport is important to many nations, both as a strategic tool and a manifestation of power, and as a mythical and emotional entity enabling people to conceive themselves as a nation.

Any attempt to employ sport as political trope in an ongoing process of state formation must be based on understanding there may be multiple identities and loyalties. While teaching youngsters and adults to see sport responsibilities as political responsibilities may appear trivially symbolic, it is just as surely true as coming to identify with a nation one has been brainwashed or manipulated to compete for does not negate the nagging fact that one has been harmed. Even athletes and sport fans have rights to self-determination.

4. Прочитайте та виконайте письмовий переклад тексту.

As sources of economic and political problems have become increasingly plentiful, questions of how sport administrators perceive roles of sport in social development and change become ever more pressing. This is so much so because images and perceptions of sport policy goals are powerful, bound up with a multitude of different ideological agendas. They have very real consequences - not only for sport as a socio-cultural institution, but also for a country’s relationships with other nations. Core policy beliefs of sport administrators do not just reflect, they also create and reproduce government practices towards such issues as sport and nation building, sport and human rights, sport and environment, and roles of sport in international relations. As Sage (1993) wrote — The essence of human movement practices is found within the nature of their relationship to the broader stream of societal forces of which they are a part. Relevant issues involve how human movement activities, and their professional scholars and practitioners, are related not only to social class, race, and gender, but also to the control, production and distribution of political, economic and cultural power.

As sport globalizes and international competitions flourish, sport administrators continue major roles in interpreting sport policy goals. In the historical transition now changing the world, it has become imperative to investigate how prospective sport administrators think about relationships between human movement and human affairs. Policy goals and priorities are ultimately social, often political, and may be more than the sum of individual preferences of technocrats, with possibilities inherent in attitudinal norm enormous.

4. Прочитайте й виконайте письмовий переклад тексту.

Wellness is an optimal state of health and well-being. It is the capacity to live life to its fullest potential, to be fully alive. In the past, traditional approaches to health have emphasized alleviating or treating disease. From this traditional perspective good health was viewed as freedom from disease; therefore an individual who was not sick was considered to be healthy. Wellness goes beyond this perspective. Not only does wellness involve freedom from disease, it also involves an optimal state of well-being. Wellness depends on the individual making responsible and appropriate lifestyle decisions. Experts recognize that many decisions we make pertaining to our lifestyle can significantly influence our health status. These decisions can influence not only our current quality of life but although our length of life. For example, the decision to smoke cigarettes or not to smoke them is a personal choice that will ultimately have an impact on the state of one’s health. Furthermore, experts also believe that many diseases experienced later on in life have their roots in childhood. For example, obesity and physical inactivity, two risk factors for coronary artery disease, hypertension, and non-insulin-dependent diabetes, appear to begin in childhood. Therefore it is important that professionals help people develop healthy lifestyles early in life. Attainment and maintenance of a high level of wellness require the individual to properly manage his or her own lifestyle. Wellness emphasizes making informed choices and taking thoughtful actions that will result in the prevention of disease and the promotion of health.

Sport is often perceived as a geographical-ideological project by many institutional patriots, casting athletes, not as interactive partners, but as adversaries. From this perspective, sport comes to look more like an end game in which policy actors strategize to brutalize and diminish opponents from other land. This approach sees sport arenas as spaces in which to articulate identity, demonstrate historical superiority, struggle vigorously to assert ideological imperative, empathize with ones friends, and rejoice in defeat and humiliation of ones enemy or ones enemy's friends. While we agree sport can not be firmly insulated from happenings around world, sport workers must try as much as they possibly can to open up sport spaces to probability of agonistic respect for, and solidarity with all peoples, religions, and customs.

It hardly needs to be said that public spending on sport infrastructures and services in developing countries is inadequate to actualize sport policy objectives. The solution increasingly espoused in the media is to let market forces take control of sport development projects to make them efficient, profitable, and, sustainable. A number of options being pursued worldwide to capture rents from sport include marketing and promoting; developing sport tourism destinations; investing in sport infrastructures, hotels, mass communication networks, bid preparations, and sport product development.

Sport privatization advocates claim commercial sport ventures could generate spillover in other sectors of the economy. While this argument may well be true, the relevant question should be whether an entire national sport council, conducting itself as an economic agent, fosters conditions enabling all citizens to follow their lawful sport inclinations, irrespective of income and social status. Policies to make the sport sector more of a business enterprise appeared to be in order, according to these respondents. Giving the relatively declining sport services in Tanzania, it is perhaps understandable they should be concerned about sport sector deregulation and commercialization. But does this imply that in any political mediation of sport development controversies by these respondents, commercial consideration would weigh heavily? Only future studies can tell.

Training physical education teachers began in Europe and the United States during the 18th century. In Turkey, however, efforts flourishing in the early 20th century became institutionalized in 1932 with founding of the Department of Physical Education at Gazi Institute of Education. For a long time Swedish Gymnastics was the subject of physical education courses in Turkey, as in many other countries. After World War II other branches of sport were practiced, along with gymnastics. Content of the school curriculum was determined by how teachers had been trained.
Whereas, physiological and muscular developments were emphasized in early days, at present the human body is considered as a whole, as cognitive, affective, and psychomotor domains and physical growth are all studied together. Nowadays, a physical education teacher does not command or dictate to students, but guide them, strives to raise student consciousness of the body in helping each adapt to the environment.

A teacher is not a person who communicates dry knowledge or present skills, but the one who takes the lead in problem-solving, and is consistent with maintaining discipline. The teacher who keeps himself/herself and the students up to date with latest developments in the world, knows his/her subject, and brings, not the teacher but the learner to the fore. He/she is very much like architects or engineers who are constructing buildings. In sum, a teacher furnishes students with qualities necessary for their cognitive, affective, psychomotor, and physical development. This is possible only if the teacher is equipped with the essential qualities.

Sport is an important part of today's society and plays a large role in many people's lives. Now more than ever, sport events dominate headlines and athletes have become national heroes. The question is does sport deserve this kind of interest and attention?

From a social standpoint, sport plays a positive role in uniting people from different social backgrounds in support of their favourite team. This can help people's understanding and tolerance of each other. However, just as sport unites people so it can divide them, as is often demonstrated by crowd violence at football matches.

As far as education is concerned, sport is an important part of every child's education, as it plays a big role in both their physical and mental development. It teaches children how to work as part of a team and cooperate with others, while at the same time improving physical condition. The only drawback to this is that children who are less able to perform well in sport are likely to feel inadequate in comparison to their more gifted classmates, which may affect their self-confidence.

From an economic point of view, sport can be very profitable and advertising. On the one hand this creates revenue for the sporting industry which allows for improvement and expansion. On the other hand large sums of money are often paid to event organizers to promote products such as cigarettes, which are harmful to one's health.

In our opinion, sport should be used as much as possible to encourage people to lead a more healthy and peaceful life instead of being used to promote unhealthy products.

3. Перекладіть подані словосполучення й складіть з ними речення англійською мовою:

- British football supporters do, however, have a history of violent behaviour.
- In the 1970s and 1980s battles at matches were a regular event.
- As violence became more organized, new laws were introduced.
police can now make arrests on the evidence of closer circuit cameras, both inside and outside football stadiums.

Stadiums are policed more efficiently and facilities inside have been improved.

It is also true that football violence has become unfashionable in England. In the 1970s 'aggression' fitted in with the cropped hairstyles, heavy boots and casual clothing. Modern youth culture is less prone to violence. Many hooligans have moved onto other criminal activities that will actually earn them more money.

Unfortunately, whatever the fashion at grounds in England, disgraceful behaviour is still seen as acceptable at football matches at international level. Abroad, English fans still do not know how to behave. Recent riots in Sweden confirmed their reputation as the nastiest and most vicious football nation.

The Germans, like the French, have made significant strides in combating violence at international level. Germany's football clubs investigated the violence and set up an 'anti-hooligan' campaign. Since then body searches and alcohol bans have become compulsory. However in Germany and Holland this has had sinister repercussions. The violence once contained in the football ground has moved into society in general. The targets of after-match violence are usually immigrants and the attacks are racist.

It is difficult to see why the unpleasant attitude of the English hooligans is admired and imitated abroad. Young Europeans are very interested in English football culture which they see as more exciting and aggressive – spectators are nearer the pitch and even the play is more aggressive. Many English players have been adopted as role models.

In the USA today, football is the most popular spectator sport. Baseball is now in second place among the sports people most like to watch. Both baseball and football are, of course, American developments of sports played in England.

What makes football in the US so different from its European cousins, rugby and soccer, is not just the size, speed and strength of its players. Rather it is the most “scientific” of all outdoor team sports. Specific rules state what each player... in each position may and may not do, and when. There are hundreds of possible “plays” (or moves) for teams on offense and defense.

There are two more sports that are American in origin – volleyball and basketball. They were both first played in Massachusetts in the 1890s, and during the First and Second World Wars they were taken by American soldiers overseas to become popular worldwide.

There is an enormous amount of live broadcasting of all different types of sports events, professional and amateur, at state, national and international levels.

Ice-hockey, baseball, football and basketball are the “four major sports”, though there are other sports and sports activities that attract millions of active participants. Among them are: golf, swimming, tennis, marathons, track and field, bowling, archery, skiing, skating, squash and badminton, rowing and sailing, weightlifting, boxing and wrestling. Statistics shows that Americans’ favourite participatory sports are: swimming, bicycling, fishing, jogging, calisthenics (gymnastics or fitness) and bowling.

The reason why so many sports are popular in the USA is that the variety and size of America and the different climates found in it have provided its people with a large choice of summer and winter sports. Most Americans who grow up in the North, also grow up with outdoor winter sports and activities. Skating, sledging and tobogganing are equally popular there. Those who in the south can’t imagine their life without water sports like wind-surfing, water skiing or sailing.

In addition, public sports facilities have always been available in great number of participants. The fact that the average high school, too, offers its students a great variety of sports may have contributed to the wide and varied interest and participation of Americans in sports.

One more reason is that Americans simply like sport activities and always have. They like to play a friendly game of softball at family picnics on beaches or in parks whenever a few young people come together. So, Americans like their sports, for whatever reason you care to choose.

Both professional and amateur sports are very popular in Ukraine. Physical education is a compulsory subject at all school levels and besides thousands of boys and girls train in hundreds of sport clubs under the guidance of highly qualified coaches. So it is no wonder that Ukrainian sportsmen show good and excellent results at national, international and world championships.

The name of Kyiv’s famous football team “Dynamo” works like a visiting card. for many Ukrainians who travel abroad, helping to find friends among football fans and supporters. This team was the European Cup Holder twice in 1975 and 1985, and their players Oleg Blokhin and Ihor Bielanov were named among the best football players of Europe. Now Andriy Shevchenko and Sergiy Rebrov have proved that they are worthy followers of the best “Dynamo” traditions.

The Ukrainian school of gymnastics is famous all over the world. Its representatives – Iryna Deriuhina, Oleksandra Tymoshenko, Oksana Skaldina and some others – have won World and European Championships many times.

The legendary veteran of Ukrainian sport, 8 times World and Olympic champion in the pole vault Serhiy Bubka holds 35 world records. He has an honorary title of the “World’s Best Athlete”. Mr. Bubka, considered the greatest pole vaulter ever, had announced in June that he would retire after the Sydney Olympics. The 36-year-old phenom had resumed full training three months prior to that, after undergoing tendon surgery for the second time in three years. He won his sixth consecutive world title in 1997 after missing 10 months of competition due to an Achilles’ tendon injury that has plagued him for several years.

In the 1992 Olympic Games, Ukrainian figure skater Oksana Baiul won the first gold medal for the independent Ukraine which sent its national team to the Olympics for the first time.

Olympic competition was the highlight of the year 2000 in sports. To be more precise, it was the XXVII Summer Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, held on September 15.

At the 26th Olympic Games in Atlanta the harvest of prizes was much greater: 9 gold and many silver and bronze medals. The winners at that Olympics were: gymnast Lilia Podkopaieva, free style gymnast Katya Serebrianska, boxer Volodymyr Klychko, a track and field athlete Inesa Kravets and others.

When it comes to sport, most Ukrainians are very serious. Especially when you mention soccer and the Olympic Games. When driving through the streets of Ukraine you will see many youngsters playing especially soccer and rugby, most of them play with the goal to join one of the Ukrainian clubs or teams one day.

Ukraine hasn’t really made a huge name for itself on the rugby levels yet but, nevertheless they have attained some interesting rugby achievements. The first open international beach rugby tournament was held in Kyiv. Although the capital city of Ukraine is not really famous for its beaches, in fact, it’s not even close to the sea. But Kyiv has what other European cities lack, the Aquapark. The Aquapark is a huge recreational area on an island in the middle of River Dnieper almost in the city center. This tournament was held by the Kyiv Orcs amateur rugby club who actually came to the idea of beach rugby by accident.

Ukraine has made a big name for itself so far on soccer levels. In fact, Ukraine's soccer is so impressive that they have even been the first soccer team that has qualified for the 2006 World Cup Finals in Germany.

Ukraine usually also does very well at the summer Olympic games. At the 2004 summer Olympic games, Ukraine managed to get a marvelous total of 23 medals. They managed to get 9 gold medals, 5 silver medals and 9 bronze medals.

For the more adventurous people living in Ukraine these lies many opportunities waiting on weekends and in free time. Sports and activities such as diving, skiing, mountain climbing, mountain biking, swimming and horse riding is becoming more and more popular by the day.

Physical education in an elementary school is emerging as the art and science of human movement. Physical education elementary school programs and teachers seek to instil in children the why of movement, the how of movement, and the outcomes or physiological, psychological, and sociological results of movement. A primary objective of these programs is the sound development of movement skills and motor patterns that comprise the movement repertoire of human beings.
Participation in a physical education program during these formative years will likely instil in the child a love for physical activity that may last a lifetime and a favourable attitude regarding the importance of physical education. If the experience is less than positive, the youngster may come to hate physical education as well as physical activity, a feeling that could remain with him or her for life. Because of the close relationship between physical activity and health, this could have a significant impact on the quality of the child's life.

In the primary grades, great emphasis is placed on learning fundamental motor skills such as running, jumping, climbing, throwing, catching, kicking, and striking. In the upper elementary school grades, children should be given the opportunity to participate in a wide range of sport and physical activities. Attention also should be given to developing desirable social skills, such as working with others.

Many reasons are given by physical educators for preferring teaching in the elementary schools. Children at this age enjoy being active and usually appear to have boundless energy. The rapid, visible skill improvement typical of elementary school students is rewarding and motivating to the teacher.

Teaching students enrolled in a middle or junior high school presents a unique series of challenges to physical educators. Because of the anatomical and physiological characteristics of this age, activities must be selected with care. Students at this level are in a period of rapid growth that causes them difficulty in coordinating their actions and often results in awkwardness and excessive fatigue. Students are faced with the task of coping with the myriad changes associated with puberty. The demand to be independent and the influence... of peers are particularly strong. Physical educators need to be cognizant of and sensitive to the many changes students are experiencing.

At this level physical education programs should include a balance between individual and dual sport activities such as aquatics and tennis and team sport activities such as soccer and basketball. Dance, gymnastics, and fitness activities also should be an integral part of the curriculum. It is important to build on the skills and positive experiences of the elementary school level. Those students who have not progressed as rapidly as their peers in motor development should receive special attention to help them improve their skills.

During these school years, students begin to specialize in certain physical activities and actively pursue those interests. Within the physical education program students should be grouped by interest and ability. Additional opportunities for students to participate in physical activity experiences should be provided through intramural programs, club activities, and, when appropriate, interscholastic sports.

At the high school level, students exhibit increased physical, mental, social, and emotional maturity. This is the time of transition from adolescence to adulthood.

One of the primary goals for physical educators teaching at the secondary school level is to socialize students into the role of participants in physical activities suited to their needs and interests. The curriculum is generally oriented toward lifetime sports, although team sports also may be popular.
During this time students should have the opportunity to develop sufficient skills so that when they leave school they will have the desire and the knowledge to participate in physical activities and sport successfully and enjoyably. Because many students do not continue on to college, it is essential that they acquire the competencies and interest before they leave high school.

Students should learn how to develop personal programs to gain and maintain optimal levels of fitness throughout their lifetime. Knowledge of the scientific principles related to physical education, self-direction in the conduct of individual physical activity programs, and an appreciation of the role of physical activity and sport in society are also outcomes of a secondary school physical education program. It is recommended that daily physical education be provided for all students. The length of the class period, the size of the class, and the quality standards used for credit should be comparable with those used for other subject areas within the curriculum.

Intramurals, interscholastic sports, and sport clubs offer students additional opportunities to participate in sport, develop expertise, and realize other desirable outcomes.

Prospective physical education teachers may also take advantage of opportunities to teach in higher education. Often a master’s degree in an area of physical education is a prerequisite to obtaining a job at this level. In some institutions coaching responsibilities may be associated with teaching positions, whereas in other institutions coaches carry no teaching responsibilities.

While typical college students are 18 to 22 years of age, there is a trend toward older individuals returning to college. Physical educators like to teach at this level for several reasons. The students are more mature, freedom to structure classes is greater, and some individuals believe that more prestige is associated with teaching at the college level. Some physical educators end up teaching at the college level because it is requirement associated with a coaching position.

The status of physical education programs in colleges and universities in the United States has changed in recent years. Today physical education at this level is usually voluntary, thus placing responsibility on the physical education department to offer courses that are appealing to students. Because of this need, curriculum at this level tend to be more flexible and to change more often in response to students’ interests and needs. Class topics may include health concepts, cardiovascular fitness, principles of exercise, biomechanical principles, and development of personalized fitness programs.

Intramurals and intercollegiate sports play an important part in college and university physical education programs. They offer students additional opportunities for participation according to their abilities, needs, and interests.

Several options are available for physical educators who desire to teach, but not in the school setting. The growth of interest in sport by people of all ages has stimulated the growth of these other teaching avenues. Teaching opportunities may be found today in commercial sport clubs, community recreational and sport programs, resorts.

The requirements for employment in these positions, working conditions, salaries, and other benefits vary widely. Some of these teaching positions require a high level of expertise in a particular sport, whereas others require individuals able to teach a diversity of activities. Working hours vary a great deal as well. For some positions, hours are often dictated by the time clients or students are available.

The physical educator should also be cognizant of the reasons of adults and youths for seeking instruction. Adults seek instruction at these organizations for many reasons. First, they may not have had instruction in the activity or activities during their youth in their physical education classes. Second, they may seek instruction for their own personal growth and pleasure. Instruction may be sought for social reasons, such as the desire to be able to participate in specific activities with friends and family.

Youths enrol in these organizational programs and classes for many of the same reasons as adults. Additionally, youths may enrol in certain activity classes because instruction or interscholastic competition in that activity is not offered in their school. Youths desiring to develop more advanced skills or to compete in certain sport activities may find these organizations offer experiences that meet their needs.

It was at the Sorbonne in 1892 that Baron Pierre de Coubertin addressed his distinguished of the French Athletic Union and first proposed the reestablishment of the Olympic Games. It required four years of intensive lobbying and planning, but in 1896 the First Olympiad of the modern era was held in Athens on April 6, Greek Independence Day.

Since that time there have been nineteen different Olympic organizing committees - in some cases. But, regardless of eventual effectiveness, each one of these groups, composed of civic leaders, politicians, and sportsmen, has had responsibility first for ensuring that the games were awarded to its city, and second for staging the Olympiads. These have never been easy tasks.

For instance, in Paris in 1900, at the Second Olympiad, Viscount Charles de la Rochefoucauld, intensive lobbying and planning of de Coubertin's, prematurely resigned the presidency of the organizing committee to avoid a rather nasty political melee that was shaping up. The ensuing power struggle among the various sports federations created such chaos that the games of 1900 eventually consisted of the usual track and field meet and a tug of war, but only half of the expected number of other sports.

The behind-the-scenes anarchy in Paris was not to be an Olympic exception. Twenty years later the fledgling Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee began its quest to bring the games to Southern California, and this group found the going every bit as rough as had its French predecessors.

On a midsummer's afternoon in 1920 a shrewd but civic-minded Los Angeles real estate entrepreneur set sail for Antwerp, Belgium, the site of the Seventh Olympiad. It was William May Garland's intention to return from the Continent with the assurances of the IOC that the 1924 Olympic Games would be held in Los Angeles.

Despite his earnest politicking, William May Garland was not successful. The blue-blooded IOC, still headed by de Coubertin, had already promised the 1924 games to Paris and the 1928 games to Amsterdam. In addition, several cities had declared themselves in the hunt for the Tenth Olympiad of 1932.

However, three years later in Rome the IOC came to the surprising conclusion that it was time for the Olympics to be held “in another part of the universe.”
Garland's years of intense campaigning finally paid off; his case for Los Angeles as the site of the Tenth Olympiad won unanimous support.

With the games firmly secured, the city and its Olympic organizers faced the enormous job of staging the international athletic extravaganza as the world fell deeper and deeper into a crippling economic depression. For the longest time it appeared that Garland and his cohorts were doomed to failure.

Consider just a few of the 1932 Olympic stumbling blocks: for many of the competing nations, California was in the hinterlands, halfway around the globe from the Olympic's usual Continental locations; several of the emerging European demagogues were having a grand time lambasting the proposed Olympic village, calling it "a perverse, an experiment"; one of the greatest Olympic athletes of all time, Paavo Nurmi, winner of seven Olympic foot races, was declared ineligible for the 1932 games for receiving money in excess of allocated expenses, during his European barnstorming competitions.

As the spring of 1932 approached, the head, winds of resistance Garland encountered, only stiffened. Even previously staunch supporters were beginning to lose faith.

4. Прочитайте та виконайте письмовий переклад тексту.

Violence is one of the major problems facing sport today. It is particularly noticeable in professional contact sports such as football and hockey. Physical and psychological intimidation of one's opponent is considered an essential part of professional basketball. Have coaches gone too far in "psyching" up their teams to go out and "kill" their opponents? In some contact sports, such as hockey, some players are even designated as "enforcers"-charged with protecting their own players and aggressively intimidating their opponents. However, violence is not limited to contact sports; bench-clearing "brawls" occur with greater frequency in even noncontact sports such as baseball. Has violence gotten out of control?
The media has done much to bring incidences of sport violence to the public's attention. Newspapers and sport periodicals give readers glowing, blow-by-blow accounts. Television glamorizes such events, often replaying them in slow motion. Special videos are being produced that show incidence after incidence of players using violence and force in pursuit of victory.

What impact has violence at the professional level had on other levels of sport? Some experts have expressed concern that the popularity and visibility of professional athletes leads athletes at lower levels of competition to imitate their actions, including their violent behaviour. Other athletes, emulate the playing style of sport professionals. Violence permeates other levels of sport and its impact on the nature of the game grows.

Spectator violence is also a concern as media coverage of violent behaviour at sport events throughout the world verifies. At some events, fans have stampeded the field and, in the process, trampled other fans to death. Outbreaks of fights among fans are reported. Experts have found that spectator violence is related to the actions of the players during the contests. In essence, player violence tends to increase the likelihood of violence by fans during and following the game.

4. Прочитайте та виконайте письмовий переклад тексту.

The potential for violence also increases when fans believe that their team was "robbed" of a score or a victory by incompetent or unfair officiating. Crowd dynamics also influence the occurrence of spectator violence, including the amount of alcohol consumed, the importance of the contest, the demographics of the crowd, crowd size and seating arrangements.

It is important to note that the environment in which the contest takes place contributes to its potential for violence. As Coakley points out spectators bring the issues and ideologies that are reflective of the events within their communities to sport events. When conflict and violence are an integral part of a community, the likelihood of spectator violence at a local sporting event increases. For example, highly publicized contests between rival high schools where high levels of racial and ethnic tension exist in the communities have led the violence. In some communities, efforts to prevent violence at school sporting events have led to the banning of all spectators from the events or the playing of events at neutral sites.

The question of how to deal with the problem of violence in sport has no single, simple solution. Experts are in agreement, however, that some type of control must be instituted and it must start with persons who love sport and want to protect it from intrusions that will lower its value. They point out that violence is to be abhorred, particularly because it interferes with proper play, detracts from excellent athlete performance, and is barbaric in nature. Most spectators, it is suggested, do not want to see players hurt or crippled. They want to see clean, hard tackles and hard body checks. This is the essence of the game and sport itself.

It has been suggested that to reduce violence stricter penalties should be imposed at all levels of sports. Indeed, athletes in some sports and at some levels of competition are being penalized more severely for violent acts. However, the real and best solution to the problem of violence is a change in attitude on the part of all persons concerned.

An increasing number of individuals are finding challenging and personally satisfying sport experiences through participation in amateur sports. Each year millions of boys and girls participate in sport competitions organized under the auspices of such amateur sport organizations as the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU). Youths who participate in these games have the opportunity to travel, make new friends, experience the excitement and thrill of competition, test their skills against a high level of competition, and be recognized for their achievements.
In many state games protocol similar to the Olympics is followed. During the opening ceremonies competitors may march in and participate in a torch lighting ceremony symbolizing the opening of the games. In a manner similar to the Olympic Village athletes from across the state are housed and fed together in college facilities. Medal ceremonies recognize the achievements of the games participants. Monetary support for the games may come from state funds or from commercial sponsors. The state game movement has drawn support from the United States Olympic Committee and the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports. These games offer athletes within the state the opportunity to compete against each other and it broadens the thousands of amateur athletes to experience the positive aspects of amateur sport competition.

Another example of the growth of amateur athletics is the National Sports Festival. The sport festival provides opportunities for amateur athletes from across the nation to compete against each other as well as develop friendships and wholesome rivalries. Several Olympic athletes have participated in both state games and the National Sports Festival. In 1986 the name was changed to the U.S. Olympic Festival.

The modern pentathlon is a fascinating event, but for a variety of reasons it hasn’t drawn much attention from sports fans in this country. For Americans, it is a foreign sport – foreign to our way of thinking and with roots in other countries. Moreover, it is a military event. To this day all of the U.S. Olympic competitors in the modern pentathlon have been members of the armed forces.

The prime force behind getting the modern pentathlon onto the Olympic program was the founder of the modern games, Pierre de Coubertin. The baron regarded the modern pentathlon as the test of the true renaissance athlete, since its five disciplines try the athlete in completely different areas.

The five events of the modern pentathlon are riding, shooting, swimming, and running. In concept, the event re-creates a series of challenges that a military courier might encounter under conditions of war.

The courier commandeers a horse, any horse, and gallops off toward his destination. He is pursued. The enemy successfully shoots the horse out from under him. The courier grabs his sword and engages his pursuers. He defends himself well, but his sword is broken. He must resort to his pistol. His excellent marksmanship wounds the enemy so he can make his escape. He flees, but soon encounters a river, which he swims across, and then he runs cross-country until he reaches his destination. It is a wonderful and an exciting premise on which to base a sporting event.

Each country may enter four contestants in the pentathlon: however only three are allowed to compete.

The beginnings of baseball are generally credited to the British, who developed the game of “rounders” as early as the mid-eighteenth century. After arriving in the United States it became known as townball and eventually baseball. The man usually regarded as the father of American baseball is Abner Doubleday, who organized the first set of rules for the sport in 1839 at Cooperstown, New York, now the site of the Baseball Hall of Fame.
Baseball is played on a large field, the outer perimeter of which has no exact standards. The field is divided into an infield (the diamond) and an outfield.
The pitcher's mound is 60 feet 6 inches from the batter's box. There are four bases – home, first, second, third. The distance between each base is 90 feet.

Although the outfield has no exact measurements, it is enclosed by a wall, usually 250 to 400 feet from home plate.

There are nine players to a team. The defensive team has men positioned at nine spots – first base, second base, shortstop, third base, leftfield, rightfield, centerfield, pitcher, and catcher. The offensive team sends one batter at a time to home plate. There he faces the opposing pitcher, who is throwing the ball across the plate to the catcher. The batter attempts to hit the ball and move himself around the bases until he scores a run.

A regulation game is played in nine innings – an inning allows each team to bat. A team loses its turn at bat after the players make three outs.

The baseball bat is usually made of wood (ash), but recently amateur teams have taken to the aluminum bat. The baseball has a rubber core, which is wrapped in wool yarn and encased in leather. The players on defense, field their positions wearing gloves made of leather.

Contemporary equestrian sports are to some degree derived from specific military maneuvers developed over the centuries. Since World War II, when the Polish and Soviet cavalries made their tragic and futile stands against the German tanks, the horse has had no place in combat, but the equestrian skills associated with military horsemanship survive.

The equestrian competition is one of only three events (the others being shooting and yachting) in which men and women compete on an equal basis. Teams are composed of the best riders from each nation, regardless of sex.
The three specific areas of equestrian competition are dressage, jumping, and three-day. The three-day is a combination of dressage, jumping, and cross-country. First contested is the dressage. Each nation may enter five riders plus a reserve and eight horses in the three-day.

In the dressage portion of the three-day, the rider must lead his mount through a set of intricate maneuvers, including the walk, the canter, the false counter canter, and the piaffe and pirouettes. The sight of an impeccably groomed horse carrying his erect, skilled rider through these unusual movements is one of the aesthetic delights of the Olympics.

A rule of the equestrian events is that riders and horses are forbidden to practice on any of the Olympic courses. A month before the games, the competitors are sent a rough sketch of the layout, but they first see the actual course of the day of competition.

Under Olympic rules, there are eleven players per team, with seven alternates. The lineup usually consists of five forwards, three halfbacks, two fullbacks, and a goalie. The goalie wears almost the same padding, including the face mask, as an ice-hockey goalkeeper. He may kick or stop the ball with his body while he is in the striking circle, but he is the only player allowed to do so; all others must use only their hands or stick.

The hockey field is 100 yards long and 55 yards wide. It is divided into four quarters. At each end of the field is a net 7 feet high and 12 feet wide. A semicircle called the striking circle extends out from the goal. A goal is scored when the ball goes into the net after being touched by the stick of an attacking player who is standing within the striking circle. The goals count one point each. The ball is generally made of plastic, though some balls have cork centers covered by leather. The ball weighs around 6 ounces and is approximately the same size as a standard baseball. The sticks are usually 36 to 40 inches in length; the blade must be no longer than 7 inches.

The game is played in two 35-minute halves, with a 10-minute break in between. If the game ends in a tie, there are two 7 ½-minute extra periods. If the score is still tied, the next overtime period is sudden death, with the team scoring the first goal winning. Three sudden-death periods may be played, and if a team fails to score, there is a penalty shoot-off, in which the teams choose five players to take alternate penalty shots. The team that scores the most goals wins. (Taken from “Viewers Guide to the Summer Olympics”)

- fast-paced game
- end with the score
- to be comparable to
- games end up

- low scores
- constant scores

4. Прочитайте та виконайте письмовий переклад тексту.

Soccer is an extremely fast-paced game with constant action at both ends of the field. In many ways it is similar to ice hockey, with offensive men rushing toward the goal, defensive men trying to thwart the assault, and the goalie moving around, intently watching the ball, always preparing to cut down the angle the shooter will have at the net.

American spectators have always been hungry for high-scoring games. Many seem to equate much scoring with outstanding play. And since soccer games often end with the score 2-1 or 3-2, they cite the low scores as evidence that the game is slow and boring. However, if you consider that in American football the touchdown, which is the unit of scoring, counts for six points even though it is only one score, you’ll see that the scoring in soccer is often comparable to that of American football. If a touch-down counted only one point, many NFL games would end up with 3-2 and 4-3 scores.

Soccer is a relatively easy game to follow, which partially accounts for its great popularity. To get a sense of which team is controlling the game, notice which end of the field has most of the action, and which side is taking more shots. It is axiomatic still that a team can’t score if it can’t get the ball out of its own territory.

To watch the great Olympic players control the ball is a thrill. They are as deft and agile with their insteps (the toe is rarely used for kicking) as most athletes are with their hands. They fake, stop, dribble, and shoot with uncanny accuracy. Another exciting move is the header, in which a goal is scored by a player’s heading the ball into the net. Obviously, it takes a strong neck and excellent coordination to head the ball with the force required to score a goal.

During his thirteen-season NBA career with the Boston Celtics, Bill Russell played on eleven championship teams. Add NCAA championships in his junior and senior years at University of San Francisco, plus a streak of fifty-six consecutive wins and a gold medal in the 1956 Olympic Games, and Russel won fourteen major championships in fifteen years. No other athlete in professional sport resides in Russell's winning neighbourhood. The only pros who approach his victory numbers are Henry Richard and Yogi Berra. The superb two-way centre of the Montreal Canadians, Richard played on eleven Stanley Cup championship teams in a twenty-season hockey career. In Berra's nineteen baseball seasons with the New York Yankees, the team won fourteen American League pennants and ten World Series titles.

Russell was the NBA's most valuable player in five seasons, only Michael Jordan and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar won the award that often. Most players earning those honours were high scorers. Russell was a solid shooter but his defensive play-blocking shots, snaring rebounds, intimidating the opposing team's big men—and serving as the launch pad for the Celtics' fast break attack made him the game's best player. The team's brilliant, visionary manager-coach Red Auerbach saw Russell as the catalyst for the swift attack he felt would win in the NBA. But landing Russell in 1956 NBA draft after his two championship seasons with USF Dons required masterful manipulation by Auerbach. Russell once revealed his pre-game preparation. Every game he set minimum personal goals-25 rebounds, 8 assist, 8 blocks, make sixty percent of his shots, run all plays perfectly, set solid picks and fill the lanes property. He admitted that total achievement of his goal would be impossible.

Although the sport in which he was involved is not a pretty one, its history often controlled by mobsters and other shady characters, world heavyweight boxing champions have always been among the most famous-and wealthiest-sport performers. At his peak, he straddled the world like a god, spending as much time on the front sports pages, growing from a loudmouth young punk to one of the globe’s most revered and beloved figures. Muhammad Ali was an amazing athlete who crowned himself “the greatest” early in his boxing career, then spent his life proving it. His followers claim he did, and even those who were not his supporters conceded that he was perhaps the most fascinating
Muhammad Ali crowned himself “the strongest” in his boxing career. He never could predict the outcome of his bouts and round in which an opponent would fall. He had style flaws that would prevent his becoming a top professional. He swayed backwards, bending at the waist far enough to make the punch fall short of his chin. From the start he was a notorious self-promoter, which earned him scorn from the largely white establishment press, who were not impressed by lippy «negro» kids who boasted speed, grace and power in the ring, charm and wit outside it. He audaciously predicted the outcome of his bouts, often naming the round in which an opponent would fall. In the pre-fight build-up Ali was bragging, loudmouth challenger, appearing to prattle on about what he planned to do in the fight out of fear. His sense of humor was equally outrageous and replete with sassy jokes. He seemed set on enjoying life to the fullest.

The Formula One Grand Prix is perhaps global sports’ biggest annual show. Each year it has events in more countries than any other single sporting league or association and attendance at races is massive. The men behind the wheel form a galaxy of international stars, with the top-salaried drivers being the highest paid sports performers in the world. The equipment they drive, meanwhile, requires gigantic budgets and sponsor packages that total in the billions. Germany’s Michael Schumacher is, without a doubt, the brightest star currently gracing the formula One firmament, and he has a salary to match.
His total income, including bonuses, endorsements, and appearance fees, is estimated to be approximately $123 million. He made his F1 debut in a Jordan-Ford in 1991 at Spa in Belgium. His car failed on the first lap, but Schumacher’s career continued full blast. He moved to Benetton team that same year and competed in 5 Grand Prix races with Nelson Piquet as his teammate.

His first F1 victory came one year after his debut at Spa, establishing him at last as a bona fide contender on the world’s top racing circuit. His first world driving championship in 1994 driving for the Benetton team, becoming at 25 the youngest ever to wear the crown. But the victory capped a controversial season. Schumacher was disqualified from 2 races for rules infractions and was ultimately suspended from the Italian and Portuguese GPs as punishment for his transgressions. In 2000 Michael started his sweep of four championships by winning the first title for Ferrari since Jody Scheckter in 1979. He twice won four races in a row, including the final four to hold off a big McLaren challenge. In 2001, he won nine times, clinched the title with four races to go, and passed Prost’s record of 51 GP victories. In spite of his success this year, Schumacher did his best to remain humble, rejecting all comparisons to Fangio.

Named after the creative inventor Thomas Edison, Pele would himself become one of the most creative and inventive soccer players of all time. He began to play for the Bauru junior team and quickly attracted attention. His coach offered to tutor the boy on the finer points of the game, and Pele soaked it up. Wisely, however, he never attempted to curb the youngster's natural gifts, concentrating instead on Pele's weaknesses. Driven by his passion for a sport, Pele, at the age of 15, attempted to convince Sao Paolo, a big city professional club, to let him join their team. He was quickly rebuffed with a ,,don't call us we'll call you” reply. However the scout for another professional club, Santos, brought him in for tryout. He made his debut for this club at 15 and during first 6 years with the team, he led Santos to six straight championships, and also inspired it to victory in the 1962 and 1963 World Cup. When Pele starred for Brazil in the World Cup his face became recognizable throughout the world. Regardless of their culture or country of origin, soccer fans around the planet watched in admiration Pele’s displays of passion and skills. After scoring 6 goals in his World Cup Pele’s ability to put in a similar performance in 1962 was curtailed because of nagging injuries. But Brazil prevailed nevertheless. Four years later, cruel fate befell Pele again as opposing defenders hacked, tripped, and literally kicked him out of the competition, crippled with a myriad of injuries. He had scored a mindboggling 1200 goals in just 1300 professional games. He reached the 1000th-goal plateau in just 909 games, on November 20, 1969, resulting in the creation of commemorative stamp. The famous number 10 is depicted in a big leap of jubilation, a celebration often seen by his fans. The unbridled joy, smile and the ever-present clenched fist of success are pure Pele. Whether it was his first goal or thousandth, he showed the same sincere outpouring of complete happiness.

Athletes who rule their sport usually epitomize sparkling health and super fitness. But the greatest admission is reserved for the athlete who overcomes physical impairment to grab the ultimate prize. The transcendental journey of Lance Armstrong in one of the most grueling events in sport, the Tour de France, has come to symbolize triumph over adversity. Sports fans love grand spectacles, and none captures in imagination like the Tour de France. First held in 1903 it became the premier cycling contest in the world and through the years has produced many celebrated cyclists among which was Lance Armstrong. He grew up a fatherless loner and searching for ways to channel his rage and frustration, Lance quickly realized he had a natural penchant for Iron Kids triathlon. He derived great satisfaction from running his competitors into the ground, especially in the bike race portions he seemed to excel at. In 1988 Lance qualified for the U.S.Olympic development team Colorado Springs and won the U.S.National Amateur Championship at the age of twenty. Unfortunately brash Lance often failed to heed his coach’s advice. At the 1992 Barcelona Olympics he came in a disappointing fourteenth, a victim of his own undoing.

By September 1996 Armstrong was a world-class athlete with 2.5million dollar contract with the French racing team Cofids but the whole world came crashing down—he was diagnosed with cancer. Always haunted by the fear of losing a bike race, now he was paralyzed with the fear of losing his life. Excellent medical care, his remarkable fitness level and his collaborative work with physicians enabled him to win the race of his life. He made a miraculous recovery. Few seasoned riders considered him to be a threat, but Lance knew better, he clearly transformed himself: no longer the bully of the one-day races, he dominated both the time trials and the mountain stages, an unbeatable combination. He has defeated far greater adversaries, and in so doing has created a template for victory that enables him to survive against seemingly impossible odds.

COMPETENCE

Competence is how the individual interacts in the environment. Butt (1987, 39-41) identifies five categories of competence: physical, intellectual, emotional, social, and spiritual. Physical competence includes strength, endurance, flexibility, speed, coordination, visual and auditory acuity, and skill. “Intellectual competence is the ability to use the mind to reach desired solutions or decisions” (Butt 1987, 39). Can the learner size up the situation and create an effective plan of action in game play? Can one plan a smart game of tennis? Emotional competence is when people can manage their emotions such that their skill in play is enhanced. Positive emotions of confidence, stability, and feelings of success will be used rather than negative emotions of frustration, failure, blame, and fear. Social competence is the ability to work with others. Loyalty and morale are important factors. Relations with others are positive. Spiritual or existential competence refers “to the individual experiencing intrinsic satisfaction from the appreciation of morality, contentment, and the ability to be philosophical about victory and defeat” (Butt 1987, 40).

The objective in competence is to prepare self-sufficient performers. They know their strengths and weaknesses. They also appreciate the strengths and weaknesses of others, including teammates and opponents.

(Originated from A. Clement, B. G. Hartman The Teaching of Physical Skills)
Athletics (Greek athlos, “contest”), games or contests, played individually or in teams, involving physical strength, skill, and endurance. In the United States, the term is used synonymously with sports; in Britain, however, it refers specifically to track and field events. In general, athletic contests can be divided into contact and noncontact sports. Contests involving physical prowess or simulated combat date from prehistoric times and are probably as old as community life; the origin of such organized athletics as the Olympian Games (776 BC) in Greece is shrouded in legend. Although most early peoples engaged in games simulating combat, such as boxing and wrestling, some developed organized noncombative sports. The Native Americans of North America, for example, played games resembling modern lacrosse, field hockey, and lawn bowls. They also engaged in foot racing and, after the introduction of the horse into North America, horse racing.

In historical times a great development of organized games took place in ancient Greece and Rome. Among the games were foot racing, wrestling, boxing, horse racing, chariot racing, and the pentathlon. After the fall of the Roman Empire in the 5th century AD, organized sports declined in popularity until the 11th century, when the tournament, also known as joust, became a favourite pastime of the nobility. In England, especially, the sport of the common people was archery. The English also engaged in various forms of football and such field sports as throwing the bar or the hammer, but these were considered detrimental distractions from the military sport of archery and were sometimes actually forbidden by law. Not until the middle of the 19th century did the schools and colleges of England and the United States begin a revival of athletics, which continues today, reinforced by medical proof of the benefits of physical exercise. Many games formerly played only by men now are also played by women. Historically, a rigid distinction has been made, especially in the United States, between amateur athletics and professional sports played for money or valuable prizes. This distinction has become less rigid with time, however, and the issue is a source of controversy, particularly in collegiate and international competitions.
THE WINTER OLYMPICS

The move toward a winter version of the Olympics began in 1908 when figure skating made an appearance at the Summer Games in London. Ten-time world champion Ulrich Salchow of Sweden, who originated the backwards, one revolution jump that bears his name, and Madge Syers of Britain were the first singles champions. Germans Anna Hubler and Heinrich Berger won the pairs competition.

Organizers of the 1916 Summer Games in Berlin planned to introduce a "Skiing Olympia," featuring nordic events in the Black Forest, but the Games were cancelled after the outbreak of World War I in 1914.

The Games resumed in 1920 at Antwerp, Belgium, where figure skating returned and ice hockey was added as a medal event. Sweden's Gillis Grafstrom and Magda Julin took individual honors, while Ludovika and Walter Jakobsson were the top pair. In hockey, Canada won the gold medal with the United States second and Czechoslovakia third.

Despite the objections of Modern Olympics' founder Baron Pierre de Coubertin and the resistance of the Scandinavian countries, which had staged their own Nordic championships every four or five years from 1901-26 in Sweden, the International Olympic Committee sanctioned an "International Winter Sports Week" at Chamonix, France, in 1924. The 11-day event, which included nordic skiing, speed skating, figure skating, ice hockey and bobsledding, was a huge success and was retroactively called the first Olympic Winter Games.

The 1940 Winter Games are originally scheduled for Sapporo, but Japan resigns as host in 1937 when the Sino-Japanese war breaks out. St. Moritz is the next choice, but the Swiss feel that ski instructors should not be considered professionals and the IOC withdraws its offer. Finally, Garmisch-Partenkirchen is asked to serve again as host, but the Germans invade Poland in 1939 and the Games are eventually cancelled.

Seventy years after those first cold weather Games, the 17th edition of the Winter Olympics took place in Lillehammer, Norway, in 1994. The event ended the four-year Olympic cycle of staging both Winter and Summer Games in the same year and began a new schedule that calls for the two Games to alternate every two years.
EXTREME SPORTS: HISTORY

Some sociologists say that extreme sports are similar to vision quests or other traditional rites of passage common in some cultures. In many traditional cultures, rites of passage are severe physical ordeals during which adolescents experience intense personal growth. Initiates often leave their families and undergo a lengthy seclusion during the event. Some modern observers believe that extreme sports enthusiasts seek the same sort of experience by undertaking risky activities in small, closely knit groups.

It is difficult to determine exactly when the term extreme sports came to refer to the modern sports discussed in this article, but many believe it can be traced to the early 1970s, when rock climbing and marathon running – then considered extreme – gained popularity. Several reasons have been cited for the growth of extreme sports since that time.

Extreme sports may have gained popularity in the late 20th century as a reaction to the increased safety of modern life. Lacking a feeling of danger in their everyday activities, people may have felt compelled to seek out danger or risk.

Another reason for increased participation in extreme sports is enhanced sports technology. For example, the invention of sticky rubber-soled climbing shoes and artificial climbing walls broadened the appeal of rock climbing. And advances in ski design allowed more skiers to attempt extreme feats previously thought impossible.

Some observers credit television and movies for helping to popularize extreme sports. Television coverage of competitions and events has brought extreme sports and their participants more attention. As more people become aware of extreme sports, the activities gain more enthusiasts. One result of the growing interest is that those who pride themselves on participating in challenging, cutting-edge activities are constantly searching for new ways to test themselves. This ensures the continuing development of newer extreme sports.

(Microsoft* Encarta* Encyclopedia 2000, Contributed By: Hope Winsborough)
Extreme Sports, nontraditional sports and activities that require participants to combine athletic skill with pronounced risk. Most extreme sports are not true competitive sports because the main challenge is not imposed by another athlete or opposing team, but by the inherent difficulty of the activity. Extreme sports allow and encourage individual creativity in the innovation of new maneuvers and in the stylish execution of existing techniques. Because extreme sports enthusiasts place themselves in dangerous situations, controlling risk is vital. Before enthusiasts attempt risky activities, they must know their own physical abilities and understand how well they can block the natural instinct of fear. Extreme sports enthusiasts also must recognize the physical limits of their equipment. Participants should have experience in whatever activity they are taking to an extreme level, and must know what they will do in an emergency.

Some of the most popular sports that can have extreme elements are extreme skiing, extreme free rock climbing, snowboarding, mountain biking, in-line skating, and white-water kayaking. In these activities, extreme athletes exceed traditional safety limitations to create new disciplines in the sport. For example, people who engage in extreme skiing make dangerous runs down mountains over uncharted terrain. Likewise, extreme free rock climbing, or rock climbing without ropes, is generally considered more dangerous than traditional climbing methods, which typically incorporate protection in the form of a climbing partner and roping system.

Some extreme sports combine the techniques and physical skills of two or more sports, often mainstream sports that were once considered extreme. One of the best examples of this sort of transition is found with skysurfing, which first became popular in the 1990s. The sport combines skydiving and snowboarding. Experienced parachutists perform acrobatic stunts on boards similar to snowboards. Individually, skydiving and snowboarding were once considered extreme. And snowboarding’s own development owed much to the sports of skateboarding and surfing, which were considered nontraditional when they were first popularized in the 1960s.

ORGANIZING COMMITTEES OF THE OLYMPIC GAMES

The Organizing Committees of the Olympic Games organize the Olympic Games. The organisation of the Olympic Games is entrusted by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) to the National Olympic Committee (NOC) of the country of the host city as well as to the host city itself. The NOC forms, for that purpose, an Organising Committee for the Olympic Games (OCOG) which, from the time it is constituted, communicates directly with the IOC, from which it receives instructions.

The OCOG executive body includes: the IOC member or members in the country; the President and Secretary General of the NOC; and at least one member representing, and designated by, the host city. In addition, it generally includes representatives of the public authorities and other leading figures. From the time of its constitution to the end of its liquidation, the OCOG must comply with the Olympic Charter, the contract entered into between the IOC, the National Olympic Committee and the host city (Host City Contract) and the instructions of the IOC Executive Board.

A few aspects of an Organizing Committee’s work:

• To give equal treatment to every sport on the programme and ensure that competitions are held according to the rules of the International Sports Federations;
• to ensure that no political demonstration or meeting is held in the Olympic City or its surroundings;
• to choose and, if necessary, create the required installations: competition sites, stadiums and training halls; to arrange for the required equipment;
• to lodge the athletes, their entourage, the officials;
• to organize medical services;
• to solve transportation problems;
• to meet the requirements of the mass media in order to offer the public the best possible information on the Games;
• to organise cultural events that are an essential element of the celebration of the Olympic Games.

COMPETITION AND COOPERATION

Competition is the capacity to outplay another person or group; cooperation is the capacity to join one or more persons in directing energy toward a common goal. Competition and cooperation can be examined from the standpoint of the desire of the performer or from the context that advanced forms of physical activity demand certain types of behaviors. Some people enjoy competition and appear to be able to maintain a higher level of skill when confronted with competition. Placing a person whose skills are not fully learned in a competitive or distractive situation may cause the skills to deteriorate. Research (Butt 1987, 59) confirms this theory.

Deutsch (1982), who has conducted research on cooperation and competition for nearly forty years, states that the notion of competition in our society must be placed in an appropriate perspective and reduced. Today's classroom literature contains a plea for teaching cooperation and avoiding competition.

Cooperation is easily included in the physical skill learning environment as the professional implements the practice progression. Competition, or the stressing of an individual or a group of individuals to outperform another group, is introduced to advanced or skilled physical activity performers. At this point, the performer is challenged either to reach a particular standard of skill or to, for example, produce the best balance beam routine in an instructional environment, local competition, or the Olympic Games. Competition is the objective in many activity organizations. Nearly all games, and all sports involving teams, draw upon the competitive elements for achievement and bringing the game to a completion. The nature of the activity organization is to provide competitive challenges to performers.

(Originated from A. Clement, B. G. Hartman The Teaching of Physical Skills)
Motivation is why people do what they do. Probably the most important motivation that the professional in physical activity hopes to achieve is to inspire the learner to want to continue to pursue physical activity. If the professional is a school physical educator, the aspiration is that the learner will be a physically active person throughout life. The tennis professional or the aerobics instructor may wish to channel the learner's motivation toward the particular activity represented. Motivation, like arousal, is a form of human energy. It differs from arousal in that the energy has direction. A performer's motivation is influenced by intrinsic and extrinsic factors. Extrinsic or external motivation is influenced by feedback from others and from the environment in which one performs. Intrinsic or internal motivation comes from within the performer.

Intrinsic Motivation. Little is known about intrinsic motivation; however, it may, on occasion, be the factor that keeps a poor performer returning to practice or a good performer challenged, such as a skilled skier being out on the hill 100 days each year. Intrinsic motivation involves the excitement, challenge, and sense of accomplishment that often accompanies participation in physical activity. The fact that a person can get lost in the physical activity is possibly one of the most important intrinsic values of a person under stress. Even though some members of society believe that the extrinsic threat of a heart attack or osteoporosis will keep people moving, some believe that those who will exercise seriously will participate because of the joy of movement (Clement 1988).

Extrinsic Motivation. Extrinsic motivation is the motivation inspired by external forces. Many people exercise to ward off the chance of a heart attack or osteoporosis. Others allow the mirror to suggest that their weight needs to be decreased or merely shifted around. Threats of increased health care costs serve to motivate certain people. Among young people, attention and respect accorded elite athletes has been found to be a high motivator. Feedback serves to influence motivation. All forms of feedback, from brainwashing to the absence of reinforcement, affect the learner.

REINFORCEMENT

Considerable writing and research has been conducted on behavior and behavior modification. Reinforcement or feedback may be negative or positive. The object is to strengthen certain behaviors whether the behaviors are positive or negative. Punishment differs from reinforcement in that its purpose is to terminate certain behaviors. Reinforcement is used extensively in teaching. It is the continuous feedback provided to the performer about his or her achievement. At the beginning level, all performers need to be successful. Simplistic skills are mastered and reinforced. Difficult skills are introduced only after the elementary skills can be repeated consistently in a stressful situation.

Characteristics of a good reinforcement program are that it is consistent, immediate, administered in small increments, a combination of positive criticisms given first, followed by negative criticisms.

Feedback in the learning environment is most successful when the instructor first points out and reinforces the good parts in the performance. This is followed by the negative criticism of one or two of the most serious faults or the faults the instructor knows the learner will be most likely to change. Gill (1986) uses the word shaping to discuss the instructor's guidance of an athlete toward a particular performance. The teacher makes the sequence known to the performer and then slowly guides the performer toward a successful acquisition of the sequence.

Many physical activity environments use various extrinsic awards, such as medals, T-shirts, etc., to encourage participation and improve performance. The Canadian and Norwegian Sport Federations have created an entire system of medals that are used to encourage participation. Research results have provided mixed messages about the value of these extrinsic awards. Speculation also exists as to whether some people, particularly young children, become more interested in the award than in the participation.

If the teacher expects the learner to succeed or believes the learner has superior capabilities – whether this fact is valid or not – the teacher will find the learner succeeding. Teachers’ expectations are, in fact, a self-fulfilling prophecy.

The social system's structure and composition, its functions and change related to human behavior, are the foci for sociological inquiry. Social systems are composed of individuals whose interests and expectations are similar in beliefs and standards. Sport is an example of a social system and the analysis, research, and study of this system has resulted in the formulation of the subdiscipline of sport sociology.

Sport is examined from the standpoint of a social institution or system. The use of pattern mechanisms by persons in the system is fundamental to the system's integrity and to the solution of functional problems. Examples of pattern mechanisms germane to physical activity are cooperation, competition, and complementation.

Personality development and the relationship of individuals in the sport system involve the behaviors of aggression and violence. Within the instructional setting these behaviors have a particular impact on the functional problems of sport social interaction and socialization.

Skill appreciation and social development in and through the sport (physical activity) system are fundamental to the system's integrity and function. A focus on these cultural elements is necessary for regulation, change, and instruction in movement.

Social systems are large and small, simple and complex. One system is sport. This sociocultural dimension involves a form of human movement called play. Understanding this cultural expression sets the stage for understanding sport as a social institution.

Sociology, or the social aspects, of sport and physical activity are varied. A person's reasons for acquiring and using physical activity skills may be solely for socialization. Some professionals provide an environment in which physical activity is used principally for socialization. An approach to physical activity is to enable the participants to acquire the skills essential to shared activity and then to join others or socialize in game or sport. Another approach is to create the game, sport, or social environment and then to attempt to develop skill even though the group's effort is social.

(Originated from A. Clement, B. G. Hartman The Teaching of Physical Skills)
Play as a form of movement is an important cultural expression. It can be:
- recreative or instinctive
- self-expressive
- a directed release of surplus energy

Singer (1976, 40) defines play as "an enjoyable experience deriving from behavior which is self-initiated in accordance with personal goals or expressive impulses; it tolerates all ranges of movement abilities; its rules are spontaneous; it has a temporal sequence but no predetermined ending; it results in no tangible outcome, victory, or reward." Play often refers to intrinsic motivation on the part of the performer. Performers are usually motivated to participate and receive satisfaction from participation in the event itself. Huizinga (1950, 1-27), in Homo Ludens, a classic writing on play, noted that play was free and voluntary, usually nonserious, and unrelated to material interests or the concerns of daily life. Sport, in turn, is highly organized with many rules and traditional rituals. Winning and losing, the primary aspects of sport are based on rules and rituals. Sport is like work; play is spontaneous. Sport is extrinsically motivated; play is intrinsically motivated.

Today's participant is often physically active because of health reasons such as weight loss or the maintenance of a healthy heart—extrinsic motivators. Intrinsic motivation for movement may be for the enjoyment of doing an activity or for the personal challenge. Csikszentmihalyi (1975, 36) uses the term flow to describe the "holistic sensation that people feel when they act with total involvement ... in the flow state, action follows upon action according to an internal logic that seems to need no conscious intervention by the actor. He experiences it as a unified flowing from one moment to the next, in which he is in control of his actions, and in which there is little distinction between self and environment, between stimulus and response, or between past, present, and future." Some people engage in human movement merely for the "flow" described by Csikszentmihalyi or the "joy of movement for its own sake".

RECREATIVE OR INSTINCTIVE PLAY

Play is spontaneous, instinctive, and brings out the creative nature in a person. Play can be an attitude rather than a place or an event. One can be playful, spontaneous, and creative at one's place of employment or vocation as well as in one's avocation. Play is how one looks at something. When physical activity becomes routine and requires extrinsic motivators, it becomes work. Play is used by participants to allow themselves to get in touch with the real person, their likes, desires, and dreams. Play can be imaginary; it can be real. People often refer to the feeling of freedom that comes with the joy of movement. The runner's high and the total involvement experienced by a tennis player or swimmer are examples of play.

Self-Expressive. Physical skills, particularly dance and synchronized swimming, allow for personal expression and creativity. A piece of music, a poem, or a reading can be interpreted in movement on the gym floor or in the swimming pool. Persons can also be self-expressive in the types of physical activities they choose to pursue. Those engaged in risk-type activities are expressing different feelings from those engaged in safe, quiet activities. Selection as well as the nature of the activity will contribute to one's opportunity for personal self-expression.

Release of Surplus Energy. A theory exists that following a long period of sedentary behavior, one should engage in an all-out physical activity in order to release energy pent up in the body. It is probably a crude form of tension release or stress reduction. This theory assumes that the activity is one in which tension will not be created. Release of surplus energy also relates to the performer's ability to become so involved in the activity that all other thoughts and distractions are eliminated. Some people find this high level of concentration, explained in psychology, easy to attain; others find such concentration nearly impossible. Some events, particularly dangerous and/or fast-moving, demand such attention. Assuming the performer is capable of attaining a high level of concentration or the event is one that demands a high level of concentration for success, the performer must analyze whether tension and worry preceding the event counteracts the release of energy in the event.

(Originated from A. Clement, B. G. Hartman The Teaching of Physical Skills)
A cooperative setting involves two or more people working together toward a common goal. The reward structure must foster cooperation. Der-lega and Grzelak (1982) note that "cooperative behavior leads to maximum joint profit for all involved parties (i.e., individuals, groups, or organizations) in a situation in which all of the parties are interdependent (the actions of each influence others' gains or losses)." Neither cooperation nor competition is inherent; both are learned behaviors.

Cooperation within a group leads to sharing of ideas, full contribution by each member, coordination of effort, and concern for and appreciation of members and friendliness. It usually occurs in a higher level of accomplishment. Orlick (1978) dispelled the myth that children need to compete to succeed in school. He noted "that children perform at least as well in cooperative as in competitive classroom settings."

Cooperation is essential for people to build trust, self-confidence, and self-acceptance. It also plays a role in friendship, appreciation of others, and ultimately in guiding people of a country and of a nation to work effectively with people of other nations. Game play includes competition and cooperation in the same setting. To be successful within a team, one cooperates or works effectively with other members of the team so that the best environment for obtaining maximum skill performance is achieved by all members. Each person strives to bring out the best in every other team member. Cooperation is playing in such a way that the performer's execution has the optimum positive impact on every other person's performance. This positive impact is influenced not only by how the performer executes the skills but the body's messages, speech, and attitudes toward fellow players. A cooperative player:

1. identifies the assets and liabilities of each teammate.
2. figures out the best contribution that can be made to maximize a teammate's talent. Is it a medium speed throw of the ball or a hard throw accompanied by a positive comment that will cause success for a teammate?
3. experiments with this knowledge in each and every practice.
4. attempts to build trust in competence and in verbal support with every player.

(Originated from A. Clement, B. G. Hartman The Teaching of Physical Skills)
The program is designed with the content of physical activity and the most appropriate methods of instruction in mind. The experiences that will best meet the goals and objectives (content) of the learner and the most efficient method of presentation (instruction) are the major components of program design.

Content is structured according to the hierarchy of movement.

Diagnostic tests are used to ascertain where on the skill continuum the client should be placed. These assessments are conducted in all learning environments. When the program goals and objectives result in a series of lessons in figure skating, for example, only fundamentals, combinations, patterns, specialized skills, and the activity organization related to figure skating are used. When the program is a fourth-grade physical education class, the performer’s skill placement in all skills in the hierarchy of movement are identified. In addition to identifying the skills in each of these situations, the participant’s physical fitness level is assessed.

Fitness levels are to be identified prior to establishing goals or objectives because the performer’s fitness and conditioning level will influence the skill level. This is particularly true of intermediate and advanced or elite athletes. Poor fitness levels will often contribute to an assessment of low skill. When the fitness level is improved, the person may demonstrate intermediate or advanced skill form.

Content is sequenced. Learners are made aware of the sequencing or progression of the content, the progressions that are imperative from a safety standpoint, and the progressions that can be disregarded. Once a teacher has an opportunity to work with a client, the teacher becomes aware of the client’s speed of learning, another factor to consider in selecting and planning content. When learners constitute a group, it is important that the instructor be aware of the location in the learning sequence of each member of the group.

AGGRESSIVE BEHAVIOR

But (1987) defines aggression as “the energetic assault on animate or inanimate objects for a purpose ... the purpose of aggression is to inflict pain, to dominate, to obtain, to outperform, to prevent.” Sports such as football, basketball, and hockey that are visible on television and well-known to the public appear to reward aggressive behavior. The National Collegiate Athletic Association’s (NCAA) revenue-producing sports also appear to reward aggressive behavior. Some people are aggressive by nature; most sport participants are taught to be aggressive. Many people have been either turned off or frightened out of physical activity as a result of the aggressive behavior of others who were learning to acquire skills in the same environment. At times, certain sport situations require aggressive behavior (e.g., football) and successful strategies within sports use aggression as a means of control. The physical skills teacher is placed in a dilemma when it comes to the acceptable use of aggression in activity. Fostering aggressive feelings may be helpful to the person who is fearful of risk activities or to the individual who is not able to obtain a right to equipment and other resources. Fostering aggression may be harmful in situations when one’s aggressive behavior is already high. The use of sport to channel aggressive behavior is often recommended in prisons and in working with "acting out youth." Some classroom teachers and school authorities would like to see the major objective of the physical education program be the positive channeling of aggressive behavior. Many pick-up basketball, football, and soccer games are engaged in to channel aggressive behavior. If the reason for physical activity for the entire group is to channel aggressive behavior, the channeling is a worthwhile goal. Problems in the physical activity environment occur when the group is mixed. When the group consists of people who are there to acquire physical skills and others whose needs are to channel aggressive behavior, an impossible learning environment has been created. Many people avoid physical activity because their early experiences consisted of being hit, pushed, or beaten up. Unfortunately, teachers are often asked to conduct activities in ways and among divergent groups that theorists and researchers have neglected to study.

Nutrition is the study of foods and how food affects the body. What one eats affects how one feels, how one's body grows and develops, how one looks, and how one performs in physical activity. Williams (1988) defines nutrition as "the sum total of the processes involved in the intake and utilization of food substances by living organisms, including ingestion, digestion, absorption and metabolism of food." Understanding nutrition enables a person to:

- maintain optimum body weight and body composition;
- know what to eat, when, and why;
- become an informed consumer.

Nutrition plays an important role in physical activity because the participant's success or ability to move at an optimum level is directly related to the nutritional status of the body. Essential to success is that the performer maintains a balanced diet. A second and equally important nutritional consideration is that exercise plays a vital role in weight maintenance and reduction. The person interested in reducing body weight or in maintaining an attractive appearance must exercise and eat the suggested amount of each recommended food. An understanding of nutrition is essential to all persons engaging in physical activity. It is particularly important to teenage athletes and dancers because research suggests that neither male nor female performers are eating a balanced diet.

Nutrients

Nutrients are the basic substances within food for which the body has use. They provide energy for metabolism; build and repair body tissue; regulate body processes. The six major categories of nutrients are carbohydrates, fats, proteins, vitamins, minerals, water. Energy for metabolism is provided by carbohydrates and fats; proteins assist in this function. Proteins build and repair body tissue, primarily muscles and soft tissue. Minerals, particularly calcium and phosphorus, build the skeleton. Vitamins, minerals, and proteins work together to regulate body processes.

PARALYMPIC GAMES

Paralympics athletic and sporting events and games for the physically disabled, including amputees, people who are blind or have low vision, paraplegics, and people with cerebral palsy. The games originated in 1948 at Stoke Mandeville Hospital, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire, England. They were the outcome of work that had begun with the general rehabilitation of veterans who suffered spinal injuries in World War II (1939-1945). The inspiration behind the Paralympics came from Ludwig Guttman, a Jewish neurologist and refugee from Nazi Germany. Sport, and particularly competitive sport, was central to Guttman's rehabilitation process for those who were characterized at the time as hopeless cripples. Stoke Mandeville began running national competitions against other hospitals and clubs, the first of which coincided with the opening day of the 1948 Olympic Games in London. From 1952 these games were staged in Olympic years and grew with each celebration. In 1960, the first official Paralympic Games took place in Rome, Italy, where 23 nations and 400 athletes competed. Winter Paralympics were first held in 1976. In 1992 in Barcelona, Spain, there were 82 competing nations and 3500 athletes at the Summer Paralympics. The first true parallel with the Olympic Games took place in 1988 in Seoul, South Korea where the athletes had a Paralympic village and used Olympic sites for competition. In 1996 the Summer Paralympic Games were held in Atlanta, Georgia, where more than 3000 athletes from more than 100 countries participated. Track events at the Summer Paralympics include 100 meter, 200 meter, 400 meter, 800 meter, 1500 meter, 5000 meter, and 10,000 meter and also 4 X 100 and 4 X 400 relays. The field events are discus, javelin, shot put, high jump, and long jump. Sports and games include archery, basketball, boccie (lawn bowls), bowling, cycling, equestrian events, fencing, goalball, judo, soccer, shooting, swimming, table tennis, tennis, volleyball, and weightlifting. Events at the Winter Paralympics include Alpine and Nordic skiing, ice-sledge hockey, ice-sledge racing, and biathlon. Modern technology has radically improved the range of possible activities for physically disabled people. As a result, the intensity of the competition at the Paralympics has increased.

Many research findings prove that active lifestyle and physical exercise are important factors in health protection. Physical activity prevents from developing most chronic non-contagious diseases such as atherosclerosis (especially on coronary arteries), hypertension, stroke, insulin independent diabetes, osteoporosis and carcinoma of the large intestine. Epidemiological data shows that physical inactivity causes twice as much development of coronary diseases, similarly as other principal known risk factors for atherosclerosis (high cholesterol level, smoking and hypertension). Physical activity brings into action direct mechanisms (effecting the cardiovascular system) and indirect mechanisms (modifying the presence and intensity of the known risk factors) thus decreasing the risk of disease and mortality from cardiovascular diseases. An important improvement of our health, as well as a longer life expectancy, result from all forms of movement and physical exercise performed over a longer period of time. A mere moderate movement suffices to achieve persuasive positive effects of a regular physical activity on health. Therefore, it is advised healthy people, as well as sick ones to take the kind of exercise they prefer, include easily into their daily routine and suits their physical fitness, age and health condition. The most appropriate programmes are population planned and influence different risk factors simultaneously. It has been proven that a regular physical activity protects health of all age groups. However, a particular attention must be devoted to the beginning of the adult age when most people give up physical activity and begin with a sedentary lifestyle.

Every responsible and economical society aims at the education of healthy, normally developed and adequately cultivated children, adolescents and, of course, adults. Today, only educated, normally developed and adequately cultivated people are equal to the challenges of the modern times. Eutrophy, a weight balance and a general health condition balance, ensures a good immunity system and a healthy psyche. Today, people take much less physical exercise than it was customary in the past. Physical labour occurs rarely. The technological progress has led to new era and a more comfortable life.
WOMEN AND GIRLS ARE UNDER-REPRESENTED IN SPORT AND PHYSICAL ACTIVITY

There exists a variety of barriers to the full and fair participation of women and girls in the field of sport and physical activity. They may be created by a lack of programs that meet the needs and preferences of women and girls, or by the absence of a welcoming atmosphere, or by a lack of facilities. For some women and girls, the barrier is caused by their exclusion from male sport teams. The sexual harassment of females in the sport and recreational system has also emerged as a barrier.

These barriers have significantly reduced the opportunities for women and girls to be participants, administrators, coaches, officials and board members. Available data point to female under-representation, as manifested in the membership registration rolls of sport organizations, and in leadership positions in these organizations. In the municipal recreational system, studies have shown the under-utilization of sport facilities by women and girls. The rate of male participation is also higher than for females, albeit only slightly, in inter-school (elementary and secondary schools, colleges and universities) athletics and in the general physical activity area.

Benefits of sport and physical activity

The benefits of sport and physical activity are many: those from participating in group activities, from the experience of developing skills, and from being physically active. An individual's social, emotional, and physical health improves.

Women and girls should have access to the benefits that participation in sport and physical activity brings. There are also benefits to the community, the province and the nation, when a whole population can have full and fair access. Community relations improve when people in communities interact in a fun and positive way. A healthier population is more productive, contributing to a region's financial viability. A healthier population also contributes to reduced health care costs. In addition, a sport and physical activity environment that taps all its potential resources enhances its chances of discovering new talents and its contributions to the community's, the province's and the nation's excellence in sport as a cultural activity.

NEED FOR A POLICY

The lack of full and fair access for women and girls in sport and physical activity is a concern for the Ontario government, not only from a benefits perspective but also from a human rights point of view.

The principle of full and fair access to services for all citizens in Ontario is a principle enshrined in federal and provincial legislation, and to which Ontarians subscribe. It is a reflection of a commitment that the Ontario government intends to integrate in Ontario's service delivery systems. The Ministry of Culture, Tourism and Recreation's policy on full and fair access for women and girls in the field of sport and physical activity supports this direction.

The Ontario Human Rights Code, which offers protection from discrimination on the basis of sex and other grounds, provides the legislative framework for this policy. In the area of athletics, the Government's position on the matter of non-discrimination was further clarified in 1986, when a provision of the Ontario Human Rights Code which allowed differential treatment of the sexes in athletic services was repealed.

In the same year (1986), the Federal government announced its policy on women in sport, and called on the provinces and territories to address the matter of full and fair access to sport opportunities.

In Ontario, the full and fair access of women and girls to sport and physical activity services has been the subject of a number of studies. The conclusion has been consistent: women and girls, in general, do not enjoy the same opportunities that are available to men and boys. Programs, especially in sport, are primarily designed for males. For this and other reasons, female athletes/participants, or programs designed for them, do not receive their fair share of resources.

A related issue, the exclusion of qualified female athletes from male sport teams has been the subject of litigation since the 1970s. Since the repeal of section 19(2) from the 1981 Ontario Human Rights Code, the law has been clear: qualified female athletes who want to join otherwise all-male teams cannot be prevented from doing so.

(Originated from Full and Fair Access for Women and Girls in Sport and Physical Activity)
POLICY PRINCIPLES

The following principles are the beliefs that guide the Ministry's policy and actions:

- Participation in physical activity and sport enhances physical, social and emotional well-being. It can lead to a personal sense of accomplishment and belonging, a healthier and more productive life and community pride. It can lead to increases in feelings of self-esteem and perceived competence.
- Participation in any activity is enhanced by a welcoming and harassment-free environment, and by the presence of programs and systems that meet individuals' needs and preferences.
- Participation is enhanced by giving women and girls a full choice, including participation in teams of their preference.
- Society's views of appropriate roles for women and girls are critical to effecting change. The Ministry believes in role models and in the positive media representation of women and girls participating in sport and physical activity.
- An approach focused on women and girls in policy and program planning and delivery enhances women's and girls' access. This is an approach that takes into account women's life cycle, economic status and specific experiences, such as discrimination and violence.
- Within the female population, certain groups face additional barriers to full participation, and have particular needs. These needs are factors for consideration in program planning and delivery. They are: the distinctiveness of aboriginal people and their right to self-government, the preservation of the culture and language of every community, rural traditions and values, the uniqueness of the urban communities, and the special needs of older and racial minority women, women with a disability.
- The government is a principal catalyst for achieving full and fair access for girls and women in sport and physical activity. Sports and recreation organizations, including the volunteers who make up the whole delivery system, are key to bringing about change.
